

Navigating a Website

3.1 Homepage: InternetForAllNow.org

This is the typical layout for the homepage of any website.

As Jane looks around, she will see the navigation menu bar at the top of the page. These choices show different sections of the website. Jane can click on these sections to look around the site.

The Search Bar

Jane can also use the search bar to look up certain words on the pages of the website.

3.2 Looking At A Website On A Mobile Phone

Sometimes a website will look different on a mobile phone. In this [mobile] example the navigation menu is a side bar. You can tell it is the menu by the three lines.

When Jane clicks on the side bar the menu will appear.

Now, let's explore the website with Jane.

Nice job! Now, Jane is on the “Events” page. It’s a common feature for the navigation menu to change so website visitors have a hint about where they are in a website. It’s similar to a You Are Here pin on a map.

Sometimes websites have information in different languages. On this page Jane has the option to view information in English or Spanish.

Once Jane is done exploring this page, she wants to go back to the homepage. To do this, she can simply click on the website logo. Most websites have a logo at the top of the page. You can click on the logo and this will take you to the homepage.

3.4 The Footer Of A Website

Jane is almost done exploring this website.

If Jane wants to learn more about this organization, she can also click on the “About” page, “Events” page, “Action” page, and other pages.

And to find out even more about this website she can scroll to the bottom of the homepage to the footer. The footer of almost every website includes details about the organization or company who operates the website.
